Giving Place to Reason
Ba Gua Zhang and Taoism
from Bough to Bo Staff

With interest in health, strength vitality and as much to have enough the opportunity to develop and acquire skill with what interest there may be to have about one's self that on one hand there is a tireless, relentless, and opportunistic in that a timeliness is nearly by necessity. That by this itself there could be place to find reason and that with enough to consider from what something is to do that the discipline, fortitude, conviction of character that something the changing of Palms - one may draw upon their fitness to see if this is sufficient to see that things may improve in time.

By definition a Bough is a large tree branch with that there is also The Bo Staff with these and that there is a large and somewhat broad area of expertise to that then there is otherwise varied interests, nomenclature, philosophies that include Zen Buddhism, Kung Fu, as well as Photography, Horticulture, and Painting.

With enough consideration to refinement, development of character, and interest in culture as well as the arts and the plainness of language that even the potential to have an interest last to have had something of the potential in the individual themselves improve with accomplishment, adventure, rigor, discipline, as well as study that a relationship of Bough to that of Bo Staff could nearly offer enough of anything that with what remains of a once furtive imagination and that giving place to reason an individual might see that it is not wasted.

Ba Gua Zhang as martial Art may have enough specificity to have reason to draw from Bo Staff to then Bough by relationship of large tree branch. That with application to Circle Walking, Lions Pose and Palm Changes as well as to a Seriousness about Fitness Goals, and Training in The Martial Arts as to have time enough to spend in the out of doors. That with the arduousness of taking seriously a fitness to that with some accomplishments things may improve that in shortened distances and that having enough to consider requires a skilled and otherwise well suited person could see something develop that made the potential for other things that might require effort seem that much more reasonable, with something of the relationship itself of Bo Staff to that of Bough of large tree branch and in that giving place to reason.
